Don't hunt for trouble.
But look for success—
You'll find what you look for.
If you see but your shadow,
Remember, we pray,
That the sun is still shining.
But you're in the way.

Don't grumble, don't bluster,
Don't dream and don't shrink,
Don't think of your worries
But think of your work,
The worries will vanish,
The work will be done;
No one sees his shadow
Who faces the sun.

Circle No. 3 of the Methodist church will meet on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Ernest O'Neill on South Harvey street, with Mrs. N. P. O'Neill as joint hostess. Miss Marie Briant is leader for this circle.

Despite the very unpleasant weather a large crowd of Hope's representative citizens assembled at the First Baptist church on Friday evening as a farewell compliment to Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Bowen, who are leaving on Monday for their new work in San Marcos, Tex. The entire auditorium of the church was thrown open and appropriately decorated with greenery and vases of lovely roses and early spring flowers, making a beautiful setting for the pleasing program which opened with three well rendered selections by the Friday Music club, choral unit, with Mrs. Ralph Routon accompanying. Mrs. W. E. Locke gave two beautiful vocal selections, followed by a delightful reading by Miss Lois Ferguson, expression teacher in the city schools, two numbers calling forth a round of applause were the piano solos by little Miss Nancy Fay Williams and vocal selections by Miss Frances Snyder, in which both young ladies gave promise of a brilliant future. Miss Snyder was accompanied by Mrs. J. C. Carlton. This splendid program closed with two numbers by a quartet including, Claud Taylor, J. A. Wallis, Byron Yarbrough and George Keith, with Mrs. J. C. Carlton at the piano. Before entering into the social hour, Dr. W. R. Alexander, with one of his characteristic and presented Dr. Bowen with a handsome traveling bag and Mrs. Bowen with selections of table silver, to which Dr. Bowen responded, giving a resume of his work in our city, thanking his church and other friends for the many kindnesses and courtesies extended to him and Mrs. Bowen, for their parting gifts and extended the hospitality of his new home, to any who might be traveling their way. During the social hour, pleasant conversation was enjoyed, followed by good byes and best wishes for the hostesses, who, during their four years in our midst, have made many warm and stanch friends, not only in their own congregation, but in all churches and throughout the entire community, who greatly regret their loss, but congratulate San Marcos on her gain. Delightful refreshments were served by the young ladies of the church.

Moffett Defends Akron Stability

Unionist, However, Says That Faulty Rivets May Result in Break-Up

WASHINGTON.—(P)—An opinion that the navy's flying fortress, the Akron, may be doomed to a repetition of the Shandao disaster because of hidden faulty materials was given the House Naval Committee Wednesday. Continuing its investigation of the airship, the committee also heard the chief of the Navy's Aeronautics Bureau, Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, repeat that the Akron is the best lighter-than-air vessel ever built. He told how he thought she could defend herself from attacks on all sides, her five fast airplanes darting into the fray and her 18 machine guns pouring explosive shells at enemy aircraft. E. C. Davidson of Mount Ida, Va., general secretary of the International Association of Machinists, presented the criticism. He said two men who worked on the Akron, W. B. Underwood of Madisonville, Tenn., and Lieut. Col. E. C. McDonald, a Washington, D. C., reserve officer, first brought to him the reports of defective materials. Their complaints, Davidson testified, were turned over to the navy with a request that the names be kept secret because the men feared being "framed, blacklisted" and possibly made "victims of bodily harm."

After the investigation began, both were discharged, Davidson said, and the navy found no evidence of faulty work. In the part of the ship where Underwood and McDonald worked, Davidson said, there were from 500 to 600 defective rivets. "What would be the effect of this poor riveting after the ship had been in the air awhile?" asked Representative McClintic, Democrat, Oklahoma. "She would break up," Davidson answered. "These two gentlemen informed me that in one of the tests an engine room pulled loose and that it was not reported to the government. I don't know whether that is true or not."

San Felipe Has Romantic History

San Felipe church . . . a temporary governor tried to perpetuate his name.

One of the most interesting Mission churches in New Mexico is the San Felipe de Neri Church in Old Albuquerque more familiarly called Old Town by the modern city to the east. Established in 1706, the church has been known by three different names.

Francisco Cuervo y Valdez, who succeeded De Vargas as temporary governor of New Mexico, determined to perpetuate his name. He established a Spanish town or "villa" in the valley of the Rio Grande. He called the villa—and church—San Francisco de Albuquerque, in honor of the viceroy of New Spain, the Duke of Albuquerque, and himself. It became the third Spanish town in New Mexico.

Instead of being praised, however, Governor Cuervo was reprimanded by the viceroy for having established the town without authority, and although his request for church ornaments and vestments was granted, the name of the church and villa was changed to San Felipe de Albuquerque in honor of the king, Don Philip (Felipe). Many years later the church was again renamed, and called San Felipe de Neri, the name it is known by today.

Owing to the consistent growth and consequent prosperity of the community of Albuquerque (as it is now spelled), San Felipe has not suffered the fate of destruction as have so many other Missions. It stands today as first built, embellished somewhat, its spires are remodeled, but it has the original adobe walls, sapling roof, and even the flooring in places. It is still the sanctuary of devout natives, and claims the distinction of being the oldest continuously-used church in the United States.

The old leather-bound parish registers, hand-made, brittle pages yellow with age, are among the priceless relics of the church. The baptism of an infant, Francesca Louisa Garcia, was made the year of Benjamin Franklin's birth, 1706. The second entry, July 24, 1706, is that of the baptism of a Tigua Indian baby, parents unknown, to whom the name of John was given. The latter record was signed by Juan Minguez, a Jesuit priest, later massacred in an Indian uprising.

The record books, together with some valuable sacred paintings by medieval Spanish artists, have been removed from the church for safe keeping, since an attempt to steal them was made several years ago.

Lieutenant Zebulon Pike speaks of the church in his diary which he kept en route during his forced journey from Santa Fe to Chihuahua, Mexico, under escort of Governor Alencaster's soldiers, whose prisoner he was in 1806. He was shown hospitality en route, and was entertained by the priests who were serving the parish of San Felipe de Neri. Pike praises highly the dinner served him, and speaks feelingly of the beautiful Spanish maidens he encountered in the villa.

AT THE THEATER

MARILYN MILLER, in "HER MAJESTY LOVE"

Marilyn Miller, who has endeared herself to theatre-goers everywhere as the star of "Bunny" outclasses both her former screen achievements as the barmaid who evolves into a baroness in "Her Majesty Love," which will be shown at the Seeger Sunday and Monday.

In "Her Majesty Love," Miss Miller's radiant personality expresses itself in many ways of which she is mistress. Whether it is the light comedy, where she gives the dialogue, she smiles the while, the whirling abandon of the dance, she is individual, Peter Pan-ish, and altogether, gratifying.

Incidental music adds to the gaiety of "Her Majesty Love" and Marilyn sings several songs that linger in the mind and send the audience out of the theatre humming or whistling them. Al Dublin, who did "Among My Souvenirs" and other hits, wrote the lyrics. The piece, by the way, is from the German of R. Bernaud and R. Osterreicher and the famous William Dietrich—at one time right hand man of Max Reinhardt, in Germany, directed.

"Her Majesty Love" has not only a great star, but a flawless cast. Ben Lyon plays the romantic lead. Four of the funniest of the screen comedians are in evidence—Leon Errol, Chester Conklin, Ford Sterling and W. C. Fields. Others are Harry Stubbs, Maude Eburne, Alfred James, Ruth Hall, Mae Madison and Doris Novis. Scores of Hollywood beauties are in the sparkling cabaret scenes. Two of the popular musical aggregations take part in these sequences. They are

Our Arnhem's Coconut Grove Orchestra of the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles and Rivera's South American Tango Band.

The story of "Her Majesty Love" is intriguing and the scenes are laid in Berlin and on the Italian coast. Marilyn is first seen as barmaid in a cabaret. Into the riotous throng bursts a crowd of gay young blades, led by Fred von Wellingen, scion of a wealthy manufacturer. Taken with the beauty of the pet Lis Toerrek, von Wellingen determines to meet her. His friends, wiser than he, cannot get her consent to dance with him. She finally agrees with the stipulation that he first propose marriage.

Though this is meant playfully, Fred finally does propose and the engagement is duly announced. The snobbish von Wellingen relatives are horrified at his alliance with a humble barmaid, and he is bribed into breaking the engagement.

He goes to Italy and drowns his troubles in drink. In the meantime Lis's father manages to get her to consent to marriage to an aged and many-times married baron. Fred hears how things stand at home, chatters a plan, hops back to Berlin and arrives just as the ceremony is finished. Then the fun begins all over—as you will see by a visit to the Seeger Theatre.

"Her Majesty Love" is Marilyn Miller's most delightful role. You will never forget her as the butterfly Lis Toerrek, the barmaid who becomes a baroness. Here is a picture for everybody. Be sure to see "Her Majesty Love."

Must Shun Mother
OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla.—One of the most unusual wills ever produced here is that of Leopold Guggenheim, the tycoon, in his will that Paul Guggenheim, his son, must shun his mother. The will, which is now being contested, says that Paul must shun his mother, and that he is to be disinherited if he does not.
